Acknowledgements

This volume would not have been possible without the work of the contributors who shared their valuable insights.

I am indebted to the Canada Research Chairs program for the support provided to my research endeavours.

I am also thankful for the support, assistance, and hard work I received from the staff at Athabasca University Press.

Throughout my academic career, I have had the good fortune to interact with a network of peers and students who have helped me become a better educator, scholar, and academic citizen.

Many of my colleagues at Royal Roads University have supported me in innumerable ways to complete this work. My thanks to Jo Axe, Doug Hamilton, Elizabeth Childs, Samantha Wood, Robynne Devine, Deborah Zornes, Mary Bernard, Matt Heinz, and Steve Grundy.

I am indebted to Laura Pasquini who worked with me as a post-doctoral associate and edited some segments of this volume.

My students in Canada, the UK, and the US, through their insightful questions, eagerness to learn, and inquisitive natures have helped made me a better teacher and scholar—and I appreciate them for that.